Consider this information to keep your Bus Bully Free!

Integrity

INTEGRITY is consistently behaving honestly and standing up for what is right, even in difficult situations.

Integrity is consistently behaving honestly and standing up for what is right, even in difficult situations. As a school bus driver, it is important that you conduct yourself at all times in ways that reflect a high degree of personal and professional integrity. Dealing with a bully on your bus on an on-going basis may require that you be privy to confidential, private information about a student's family situation, academic readiness, or even medical data. By law, such information can only be shared by professionals collaborating to deal with a specific situation, and it should never be discussed out of context or in personal situations. "Do not repeat anything you will not sign your name to," is an appropriate quote in this context. It is good to know state and local laws, as well as your district's code of conduct, relevant to code violations that could jeopardize your career within the district.
